TRADE COMPLIANCE WEBINARS: BASIC BUT PRACTICAL SERIES

The Center for Global Trade Education and Compliance and the Law Office of Lawrence W. Hanson, P.C. have developed an 12 month, 30 webinar series designed to provide importers, exporters, and other international logistics professionals with a base of understanding of U.S. trade regulation.

The course will start with it's first session on January 9, 2017. For further details and a complete session schedule, visit our website.

Compliance Begins With Understanding

Why was this Basic But Practical series created?

The Basic But Practical series was created to help prevent legal problems before they occur. Penalties, criminal sanctions, detentions, seizures of merchandise, liquidated damages, denial of benefits, and other enforcement consequences are usually not the result of an intentional violation of the law. Instead, the lack of knowledge within an importing, exporting or service providing organization can lead to these unfortunate consequences. Even for those with the foresight to implement a training program, the content of that program is generally a disjointed patchwork of available seminars, webinars, or self-study, rather than a cogent and well thought out program of study.

Our course is developed to provide understanding of trade regulation by focusing each class on four separate, but overlapping, facets of the regulatory environment.

Overview

1. A review of relevant regulations

Our approach begins with the obvious review of regulations that are relevant to international trade professionals. Selections of regulatory requirements are made with an eye toward exposing or reviewing legal requirements that are central to routine operations facing logistic professionals. Issues relating to imports have included entry procedures and documentation, the classification and valuation of merchandise, country of origin and marking, trade agreement compliance, Chapter 98 entries, duty savings and refund programs, and other import requirements. Export control issues have included an overview of export control procedures, an agency by agency review of mission and authority, and export documentation and enforcement.

2. An examination of the regulatory requirements from the perspective of the government

Our focus on development through this webinar series is not just a recitation or summary of a regulation. It includes a view of that regulation from the perspective of the governmental regulators. Understanding the reasons for a regulation from the perspective of the regulators can help deepen understanding of regulatory requirements and enhance compliance with those requirement while also providing a basis for discerning the impact of changes in regulatory requirements as they evolve.

3. Regulations from the audit and enforcement perspective

The Basic But Practical series also provides a perspective drawn from audit and enforcement. Looking at an issue from the context of an audit, an investigation, or a civil or criminal enforcement situation helps not only to deepen an understanding of the law, but also helps to prepare for an enforcement action, or avoid it altogether.

4. Regulations from the corporate compliance perspective

Finally, the Basic But Practical series will examine issues from the corporate perspective of compliance. Best practices, compliance planning, budgeting, and the avoidance of pitfalls will round out basic knowledge of regulatory issues. Compliance begins with an understanding of legal requirements drawn not just from a review of the requirements themselves, but also an understanding of those requirements from the shared perspective of governmental agencies and corporate compliance managers.
